Effects of a standardized extract of Ginkgo biloba, EGb 761, on the vascular endothelial growth factor-mediated angiogenesis in 3D-cultures. Ginkgo biloba (GB) extract EGb 761 (EGb) is the world's best-selling natural drug for the treatment of dementia and cerebral insufficiency. The beneficial effects of EGb are mainly ascribed to antioxidative, neuroprotective and vasoprotective properties. However, the mechanisms of these effects are not yet well understood. In addition, EGb is known to contain terpenoids (e.g. bilobalide) that can interact with membrane receptors and affect signal transduction pathways. In this study, we investigated the potential of EGb to influence the VEGF-stimulated proliferation, migration and tube formation in an established 3D-model of vascular endothelial cells. We show that EGb inhibited VEGF-induced proliferation and cell migration to a similar extent as the flavonoid inhibitor FK866. However, when added at pharmacological concentrations, EGb did not inhibit VEGF-stimulated tube formation. The PI3K inhibitor wortmannin, which partially inhibited VEGF-induced cell proliferation and tube formation, completely blocked EGb effects on cell migration. Pre-treatment with 2.5 microg/ml EGb (about 100-fold in concentration in EGb 761 compared to our standard preparations) blocked the induction of VEGF-mediated phosphorylation of the MAPK pathway effectors ERK1/2, JNK and p38 MAPK. In conclusion, we show for the first time that a standardized preparation of EGb, like its flavonoid constituents, inhibits the VEGF-mediated proliferation and migration in vascular endothelial cells. In contrast, EGb did not inhibit the VEGF-stimulated tube formation in our 3D-model. Pre-treatment with 2.5 microg/ml EGb did not inhibit the VEGF-induced signaling to the MAPK pathway effectors and did not block the induction of VEGF-mediated phosphorylation of the downstream target proteins p70 S6K and eNOS.

Age-related expression of CD71 and CD98 on blood lymphocytes. Expression of CD71 (transferrin receptor) and CD98 (dipeptidylpeptidase IV) were examined in human peripheral blood lymphocytes (PBL) by flow cytometry and immunofluorescence microscopy. Within the CD19-/CD3+ lymphocyte gate, we found that CD71 and CD98 were expressed in most lymphocytes with CD71 expression increasing from early (pre-teen) to old age (over 80 years) and CD98 expression decreasing with age. The differential expression of the two markers with age could be accounted for by the high proportion of B cells (B-1) observed in young PBL as compared to old PBL.
